Die Genera der Nomen

The screenshot shows a LearningApps.org activity titled "Die Genera der Nomen". It is a drag-and-drop game where students categorize German nouns into three grammatical gender groups: Maskulinum (green), Femininum (yellow), and Neutrum (orange). The words shown are Bahnhof, Flughafen, Fenster, Taxi, and Gleis. Bahnhof and Flughafen are in the Maskulinum column with green pins. Fenster is in the Femininum column with a yellow pin. Taxi and Gleis are in the Neutrum column with red pins. A blue checkmark icon is in the bottom right corner.

The words/ pictures/ videos will appear and students drag them to the group they belong

Did your assumptions match the stereotypes Jobrani is trying to break?

GRACIRLEI M. CARVALHO LIMA MAY 16, 2020 08:47PM

Yes. Unfortunately I do, because that is what the media is going through. A region usually about war and destruction. When we talk about Islam I think about fundamentalist radicalism.

Yes. The stereotypes about the Iranian is very common, because the religious radicalism.
— MARIA PACHECO

Yes. All the time that someone talk or is going to say about them in my mind the first thinking is radicalism. — ISABEL BATISTA

Yes. Stereotypes are The bad "guy" nowadays. Because it comes with some much prejudice and nonsense. I really am not big fan of that kind of stand up comedys because for me it used to make people only laugh and don't really discuss the problem. But it is my oppinion.
— FABRICIO RODRIGUES

WESLEY M MAY 25, 2020 01:50AM

I partially agree. In Brazil, for example, there are several sectors that are not well regulated. However, we cannot generalize either, as some problems are global.

Do you consider his strategy to break with stereotypes effective? What could you do to start breaking with the Brazilian stereotype? In addition, how do you break with stereotypes that you may have of certain groups?
